Through a partnership with the Bonner Foundation in Princeton, the CESEP program is a placement site for four full-time AmeriCorps members.

Three of the members worked in 2009-10 on a statewide initiative, "Learning to End Hunger" with other member schools of the New Jersey Higher Education Service Learning Consortium. The AmeriCorps Fellows worked with students, staff, and faculty to develop training models, plan conferences and collect data. The AmeriCorps members will also identify and recruit faculty in participating colleges and universities interested in incorporating Community Food initiatives into service learning opportunities for their students. The fourth AmeriCorps position will be focused on coordinating service learning on Rutgers campus and the Rutgers Bonner Leaders Program.

AmeriCorps Staff 2009-10:

- Beth Feehan, coordinator of Farm to School and Community Gardens and provides technical assistance that will foster new partnerships between higher education and community organizations.
- Heesun Cho, coordinating conference and special events related to the hunger campaign, documenting the NJ Higher Education Consortium projects and doing research on hunger policy with the Bonner Foundation.
- Dimitrios Dogas, coordinating family outreach efforts with community organizations and developing a Jersey based model for students to build capacity to do Food Stamp Outreach that will increase the number of eligible families registering to receive federal food support.
- Enrique Noguera, coordinating the newly launched Rutgers Bonner Leader Program and assisting with community organizations to identify service learning opportunities.
